JoVo, Szalay and I just published an article in Neuron that describes the evolution of data-intensive science from its roots in observational astronomy to what we're doing today. If you are going to change your Web page once a decade, why not with this: